Mazza Recycling Opens their “Second Nature” Bagging Plant

TINTON FALLS, NJ, February 24, 2023 – Mazza Recycling, a leading recycling and waste management company in New Jersey, recently constructed a 17,500 square foot bagging facility, also known as Second Nature, that has the capacity to produce 5.2 million mulch and soil bags annually. Currently, Second Nature is producing several bagged products, through a partnership with ScottsMiracle-Gro consumer products and their own line of mulch and topsoil products.

Mazza Recycling strives to be the leading innovators of recycling programs and facilities dedicated to creating solutions that safely preserve the environment for their community and future generations. The addition of their bagger aligns with their mission by creating locally sourced products in an already established market.

Second Nature is fully automated, featuring a Yaskawa robot that stacks the individual bags onto pallets. It also features Hamer Fischbein equipment, a Kasebill hopper and incline, and a Wulftec wrapper. Film wraps the stacked mulch onto the pallet where it is eventually loaded by forklift operators onto trucks, for delivery to box stores such as Lowes and Home Depot. Mazza’s personal mulch bags are available for purchase to local flower farms and nurseries.

President & CEO of Mazza Recycling, Jimmy Mazza, states, “Like most of our newly constructed facilities, there was a lot involved in bagging mulch that we weren’t familiar with in the beginning. However, with the popularity of the Mazza Mulch branch of our company, it made sense to take the 500,000+ cubic yards of mulch we produce from natural wood debris and safely ship it in bags that can reach a larger amount of people.”
